Please read on about the exciting work we did this year and how we deliver exceptional library services and resources. I am grateful for the support of our donors and friends who make our work possible.

We are pleased to share with you the Mercer University Library 2016-2017 Year in Review.

Sincerely,

Beth Hammond
Dean of the University Library

MERGER UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
1501 Mercer University Dr., Macon, Georgia 31207
libraries.mercer.edu

ONE MERCER UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
WHEREEVER YOU ARE,
WE ARE, TOO

For more information about University Library services, events, and news, please visit: libraries.mercer.edu
One Year Later

In 1993, the study and collection of University Library thought it was possible to facelift the library into a united organization with a renewed vision and mission. One year later, we saw what we can accomplish when we allow the collective voice of the Library staff to be heard.

In 2016, the Reorganization of the Library into a cross-campus, team approach has brought librarians, staff, and administrators together in their functional areas. Throughout the year, there have been new roles and titles that allow partnerships, shared decision making, and ways to see in the Library one set of leadership. These partnerships have enabled us to help all of Mercer to achieve academic and professional success.

The “One Mercer” Library challenge was established officially, changing the name from University Library to Mercer Library in early 2017. The Library transforms the university into a creative, collaborative, and independent learning environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow.

In early 2017, Dr. Holmes donated the bulk of his collection to the Jack Tarver Library. The items have been cataloged and organized into a database, searchable by anyone through URSA, the Library’s online catalog. Exhibits have been created to date. Five more exhibits are scheduled for the future. Two more exhibits are in the planning stage. Two additional collections are pending to be donated to the library.

In 2008, Dr. Holmes entered the Capricorn Recording Studio project by stabilizing and repairing a large-scale mural of similar scale painted on the exterior brick on the back of the building. Both murals have been also restored by Tarver Library.

Throughout the year, there have been new collections, collaborations, and initiatives that utilized partnerships, shared decision making, and new ways to serve the Mercerian community. We welcomed new members of the library community to help us serve the University better. We welcomed new colleagues: Kristen Bailey, Lydia Holmes, Emelie Edwards, Christin Fettner, Matt Lengkeit, and others.

The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.

The University Library played an integral role in my undergraduate success. The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.

The reorganization of the Library into a cross-campus, team approach has brought librarians, staff, and administrators together in their functional areas. Throughout the year, there have been new roles and titles that allow partnerships, shared decision making, and ways to see in the Library one set of leadership. These partnerships have enabled us to help all of Mercer to achieve academic and professional success.

The “One Mercer” Library challenge was established officially, changing the name from University Library to Mercer Library in early 2017. The Library transforms the university into a creative, collaborative, and independent learning environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow.

In early 2017, Dr. Holmes donated the bulk of his collection to the Jack Tarver Library. The items have been cataloged and organized into a database, searchable by anyone through URSA, the Library’s online catalog. Exhibits have been created to date. Five more exhibits are scheduled for the future. Two more exhibits are in the planning stage. Two additional collections are pending to be donated to the library.

In 2008, Dr. Holmes entered the Capricorn Recording Studio project by stabilizing and repairing a large-scale mural of similar scale painted on the exterior brick on the back of the building. Both murals have been also restored by Tarver Library.

Throughout the year, there have been new collections, collaborations, and initiatives that utilized partnerships, shared decision making, and new ways to serve the Mercerian community. We welcomed new members of the library community to help us serve the University better. We welcomed new colleagues: Kristen Bailey, Lydia Holmes, Emelie Edwards, Christin Fettner, Matt Lengkeit, and others.

The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.

The University Library played an integral role in my undergraduate success. The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.

The reorganization of the Library into a cross-campus, team approach has brought librarians, staff, and administrators together in their functional areas. Throughout the year, there have been new roles and titles that allow partnerships, shared decision making, and ways to see in the Library one set of leadership. These partnerships have enabled us to help all of Mercer to achieve academic and professional success.

The “One Mercer” Library challenge was established officially, changing the name from University Library to Mercer Library in early 2017. The Library transforms the university into a creative, collaborative, and independent learning environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow.

In early 2017, Dr. Holmes donated the bulk of his collection to the Jack Tarver Library. The items have been cataloged and organized into a database, searchable by anyone through URSA, the Library’s online catalog. Exhibits have been created to date. Five more exhibits are scheduled for the future. Two more exhibits are in the planning stage. Two additional collections are pending to be donated to the library.

In 2008, Dr. Holmes entered the Capricorn Recording Studio project by stabilizing and repairing a large-scale mural of similar scale painted on the exterior brick on the back of the building. Both murals have been also restored by Tarver Library.

Throughout the year, there have been new collections, collaborations, and initiatives that utilized partnerships, shared decision making, and new ways to serve the Mercerian community. We welcomed new members of the library community to help us serve the University better. We welcomed new colleagues: Kristen Bailey, Lydia Holmes, Emelie Edwards, Christin Fettner, Matt Lengkeit, and others.

The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.

The University Library played an integral role in my undergraduate success. The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.

The reorganization of the Library into a cross-campus, team approach has brought librarians, staff, and administrators together in their functional areas. Throughout the year, there have been new roles and titles that allow partnerships, shared decision making, and ways to see in the Library one set of leadership. These partnerships have enabled us to help all of Mercer to achieve academic and professional success.

The “One Mercer” Library challenge was established officially, changing the name from University Library to Mercer Library in early 2017. The Library transforms the university into a creative, collaborative, and independent learning environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow in an innovative and adaptive environment that allows students to grow.

In early 2017, Dr. Holmes donated the bulk of his collection to the Jack Tarver Library. The items have been cataloged and organized into a database, searchable by anyone through URSA, the Library’s online catalog. Exhibits have been created to date. Five more exhibits are scheduled for the future. Two more exhibits are in the planning stage. Two additional collections are pending to be donated to the library.

In 2008, Dr. Holmes entered the Capricorn Recording Studio project by stabilizing and repairing a large-scale mural of similar scale painted on the exterior brick on the back of the building. Both murals have been also restored by Tarver Library.

Throughout the year, there have been new collections, collaborations, and initiatives that utilized partnerships, shared decision making, and new ways to serve the Mercerian community. We welcomed new members of the library community to help us serve the University better. We welcomed new colleagues: Kristen Bailey, Lydia Holmes, Emelie Edwards, Christin Fettner, Matt Lengkeit, and others.

The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.

The University Library played an integral role in my undergraduate success. The variety of spaces to study, resources to utilize, and staff with answers to my questions made it a place where my studying could be most productive. I am so thankful that I was able to have a place where I could go to study and my time would be truly maximized because everything I needed was in one place.