William Heard Kilpatrick received the A. B. (1891) and A. M. (1892) degree from Mercer University in Macon, Georgia, and the Ph. D. degree (1912) from Columbia University. Kilpatrick was a teacher and principal in Georgia public schools (1892-1897). He returned to his alma mater, Mercer University, in 1897 to serve as professor of mathematics (1897-1906). While at Mercer, Kilpatrick also served as acting president (1903-1905). Kilpatrick moved from Mercer to Teachers College, Columbia University, where he served from 1909 until his retirement in 1938.

Kilpatrick was a leading force in education, along with his colleague and friend, John Dewey. He originated the project-method of education, a rejection of traditional subjects, and wrote numerous books and articles on this and other subjects.

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of papers of William Heard Kilpatrick from 1875, 1889-1969. The papers include clippings, correspondence, class notes, lectures, printed material, sermon notes, speeches, radio scripts, and Kilpatrick's writings on progressive education. The correspondence (1875, 1890-1965) includes personal and business letters relating to Kilpatrick's publications and teaching careers at Mercer University and Columbia University, as well as his views on progressive education. Most of the business correspondence is from students and his colleagues, including John Dewey and J.R. Mosley. The collection also contains Robin Trot letters (1951-1969), a round robin letter of Mercer alumni.

The Robin Trot was a Mercer University Alumni Round Robin letter, of which William Heard Kilpatrick was a member.

Folders include items from the title, but are not limited to the title. In most cases, additional material has been listed in parentheses.

Please refer to the William Heard Kilpatrick biography vertical file and the Mercer University photograph collection for additional items.
